

WORKPLACE

'September is full of amazing art exhibitions'
Eddy Frankel, TimeOut
25 August, 2021

Marco Anelli |

The Seven Deaths of Maria Callas by Marina Abramović Photograph by MARCO ANELLI © 2019 Los Angeles, October/2019

September is full of amazing art exhibitions

And most of them are totally free, too

Written by Eddy Frankel Wednesday 25 August 2021

Once you've had enough of art on canvases, there's Phoebe Collings-James with her first big UK institution exhibition, showing sensual sculptures and immersive sound work at Camden Arts Centre. Simeon Barclay comes back to London for the first time since his excellent Tate Art Now display a few years back for a show of new work at Workplace gallery.

For bigger names, the Barbican is doing a huge retrospective of American minimalist Noguchi's sculpture and design and the Whitechapel Gallery is showing clay works by the brilliant American conceptualist Theaster Gates. There's also - please, try to remain calm - at least two Marina Abramović exhibitions. I know, I know, it's very exciting. Relax. It'll be ok, breathe.

And then, to cap it all off, it's the return of the RA's Summer Exhibition (except it's in Autumn, but whatever). If all of that doesn't get you excited for the end of this damp excuse for a summer, then...well, you probably just don't like art very much, which is fair enough.